TIP OF THE WEEK!

What's the best way to practice for interview questions?

Write down a list of common interview questions and practice how you would answer them in an interview using the STAR method.

The STAR method (Situation, Task, Action, Result) is a technique used to structure the examples you give to interview questions. You can use it to highlight particular skills and qualities you have that the employer is looking for and the more you practice, the easier it will be when you are faced with one of these questions.

For more information, please click on the following link: <https://nationalcareers.service.gov.uk/careers-advice/interview-advice/the-star-method>

FREE NUMERACY SKILLS TRAINING

The government has launched a new programme to help adults improve their numeracy skills. The programme will be available to any adult over 19 who does not currently have a maths GCSE at grade C/4 or above (or equivalent qualification) and is intended to be offered either online or in-person on either an intensive or a part-time basis.

The programme will be free for those that meet the above criteria. Please click the link below to sign up:

Spotlight on..

Sam Tubin-Evans, Critical Care Nurse

What does your job involve?

A high level of intense one-to-one care: our patients are seriously ill and need constant, round-the-clock monitoring.

I am always on the alert for signs of infection, or problems with blood pressure and heart rate. There is a lot of personal care involved too. I keep my patients' skin dry and clean, reposition them in bed, ensure they remain hydrated and that their artificial airways are secure. If a patient is unable to speak because they have reduced consciousness or a tracheotomy, I'm on the lookout for a tiny change of expression, such as a frown or a grimace. As I'm watching them so closely, I feel as if I really get to know them.

What is the atmosphere in your unit?

Quite intense compared to a general ward. As well as beeping monitors, loud warning alarms are triggered when a patient's condition suddenly and significantly deteriorates: everyone including consultants and the nurse in charge immediately run to offer assistance. I like the fast dynamics and there is great teamwork. In the middle of the night it can be quieter – then I sometimes catch up with some nursing studies by reading at a patient's bedside.

What surprises could someone expect in your unit?

We play different kinds of music or radio programmes, depending on what patients or their family say they like or dislike. Above each bed is a sign which says their preferences such as "likes Radio 5", "likes peace and quiet" or "is an Arsenal fan". One patient's family asked us to keep the radio on during particular football matches – so we did. Research has shown that it can really impact on a patient's feeling of well-being.

What is the worst thing about your job?

Having to document every element of care you provide to a patient. Of course, it is vital, but it's still not the most favourite part of my job! The absolute worst is when a patient deteriorates unexpectedly.

What is the best thing about your job?

Having the time to devote to caring for one or two patients. The very best is when a seriously ill patient recovers enough to leave the unit. That is the nicest feeling ever.

What would you do if you could change careers?

I wouldn't. I can't think of any job I'd prefer to do.
